U.S. Department of State — Official Diplomatic Press Briefing

PARIS — U.S. Secretary of State John F. Kerry said Monday that he will stop in Paris later this week to hold bilateral talks with European foreign ministers regarding international security and economic cooperation.

Kerry said he expects to arrive in Paris Thursday evening, as he heads home after a week abroad. Officials confirmed that discussions will center on collaborative diplomatic initiatives and counter-terrorism measures.

The Federal Reserve chairman also announced on Wednesday that central bank policymakers observed a consistent cooling in consumer price index data, creating conditions conducive for an easing of monetary policy in upcoming quarters.
